

Recent years have seen increased growth for cannabis companies, especially as the market for THC products continues to expand. But this growth brings with it increasing scrutiny of the industry by regulators and private party litigants. Class action litigation risks are a real concern that will only expand as the industry continues to grow. In 2019 and 2020 alone, there were over 100 class action cases filed against cannabis companies, with many focused on issues regarding cannabis labeling, marketing, and disclosures. This article outlines recent cannabis class action trends from across the country.
