Articles

May 23, 2024

This article addresses the EPA's new PFAS rule, which marks the agency's first-ever exercise of its authority under Section 102(a) to directly identify CERCLA-specific hazardous substances.

The Biden administration has aggressively moved to regulate per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS) in various ways. Regarding PFAS as a critical environmental and public health issue, the administration has implemented regulations outlined in the PFAS Strategic Roadmap, including the establishment of national primary drinking water standards for PFAS.

Read the entire article on The American Lawyer

Authors

Explore more in

Environment, Energy & Resources Business Litigation Mining