China Releases the First National Standards on Privacy Policy for Public Comment

The National Information Security Standardization Technical Committee issued a draft of the new national standards on May 26, 2022. The new draft—Information Security Technology: Requirements of Privacy Policy of Internet Platforms, Products and Services—is available for public comment until July 25, 2022.

The Draft Requirements document is China's first list of national standards focusing on privacy policy and covers five aspects of compliance requirements, including (1) the preparation procedures, (2) the privacy policy's content, (3) release and visualization, (4) revision, and (5) the resolution of disputes over the privacy policy.

The standards can act as a reference point in drafting and implementing company privacy policies for their products or services.
