

While poking around the SEC's updated website, I was struck that the SEC announced two separate $37 million whistleblower awards little more than a week apart.

These actions provide one more reminder to public and private companies to review their employment-related agreements to ensure they do not restrict or prohibit employees from reporting suspected securities law violations in violation of Exchange Act Rule 21F-17. This has been a hot topic for the SEC for almost a decade, and is an area of focus of the new "Whistleblower Protections" page on the SEC's website.
