

Alas, even the SEC's registration filing fees aren't immune to inflation. Recently, the SEC announced a nearly 34% increase to its registration fees. Beginning October 1, 2023 – which is the start of the SEC's fiscal year - the registration fee rate will increase from $110.20 per million dollars to $147.60 per million dollars.

Securities laws require the SEC to make annual adjustments to the registration fee rates to levels that the SEC projects will generate fee collections equal to the annual statutory target amounts. In its announcement, the SEC stated that target fee collections for 2024 were increased over the 2023 target to account for the rate of inflation. Broc confirms this is the largest annual rise in filing fee rates in memory...

Explore more in

Corporate Law

Blog series

Public Chatter

Public Chatter provides practical guidance—and the latest developments—to those grappling with public company securities law and corporate governance issues, through content developed from an in-house perspective.

View the blog